Republican Leader in North Carolina Says He Means No Disparagement.

Col. C. J. Harris, of Asheville, Believes Man Like Penrose Would Fit in Well.

By PRANCIS B. GESSNER. New York, June 24.—A citizen of the republic, incidentally a millionaire, and as a matter of conscience, a Republican republic, incidentally a militoriaire, and as a matter of conscience, a Republican in a Democratic State south of the Virginia capea, came into the circle of wise men on the Waldorf roof last night expecting enlightenment on things in general and politics in particular. He was not disappointed, and added in return a few observations not overlooking a few recollections that gave a shiver to the Democrats and revived the spirits of the Republicans in the circle. This amiable citizen was C. J. Harris, of Asheville, N. C. who has long been eminent in business down North Carolina way and long prominent in the sometimes discouraging work of keeping up the Republican organization in a Southern State. That Col. Harris is hopeful this year is due, according to his declaration, to the inevitable inclination of Democrats once in power to do the wrong thing and bring about the usual thing

Lieut. H. W. Baird of the Fifth cavalry and the band of that regiment will play at the Brightwood reservoir grounds. The tournament judges will be Col. H. T. Allen, general staff, U. S. A.; Lieut. Baird, John Beale and Floyd E. Davis. Maj. C. Fred Cook, of the adjutant general's department. N. G. D. C., informed the committee yesterday that Gen. Harries has consented that the list battery of District field artillery be permitted to participate in the celebration. He appreciates, too, that every South-ern State will have to fight for future representation in conventions, and for a fair share of patronage, but the chief thought in the Harris mind is to see the next national Republican gathering made up of the most alert and sagacious delegates ever chosen. He has begun opera tions in North Carolina and for salute of twenty-one guns.
